

Table of Contents

Acknowledgements	7
Introduction: The realness of reality	9
“New reality”	9
Reality in psychiatry and psychotherapy	14
Realification as an analytic concept, reality as an ethnographic object	21
“Real socialism” and the reality gap	25
A world lost	29
Infantile fantasies	31
Depression as idiom, problematization, and assemblage	33
Methods in the ethnography of depression	34
Summary and overview of chapters	38
PART I: DIAGNOSTICS	43
Chapter One: Critical conditions	45
“I couldn’t manage anymore”	45
Idioms of distress	50
A time before depression	52
The afflictions of Homo sovieticus	57
The politics of the suicide rate	59
Depression at the margin	63
A most unfortunate man	67
Pharmaceuticals and real depression	71
Raising awareness	74
Critical conditions	75
Conclusion	79

Chapter Two: Affective disorder	81
Diagnostic transformation	84
A deficit of realness	87
Referentiality of diagnostics	91
Clinical agency	96
Diagnosing purchasing power	102
Conclusion	107
PART II: THERAPEUTICS.	109
Chapter Three: The psychopolitics of incapacity and care	111
From care to assistance	114
“Chronic rentosis ”	120
Urealnienie : maturity, emotionality, and the depressive position	124
The immaturity of pan Roman	130
Emotionality	137
Pani Honorata: incapacity, anger, and acceptance	141
Conclusion	144
Chapter Four: The ethic of powerlessness	147
The Twelve Steps	153
Crisis and reform	156
Anonimowi Depresanci	160
Powerlessness	165
Entrustment	170
The powerless subject	173
Conclusion	176
In lieu of conclusion	179
Notes	185
List of figures	223
References cited	225
Index	245